

Out of all four tables, only the customer table has a relationship with all other tables. This makes sense because it all starts with the customers and the decisions that they make. The concessions table only has a single relationship with the customer depending on what they decide to purchase. It does not have any relations to the movies and tickets tables. The movies and tickets tables each share a relationship with the customer table as well as a direct relationship with one another. Whenever a customer purchases a ticket, it is for a specific movie.
